Culture | Making Good Better

“It’s the companies with the best talent that win,” says McDermott. “Don’t underestimate the important role that your people play in your organization.”

Strong leadership is distinguished by the “people part” of what CEOs do, he says. A responsibility that should account for 80 percent of leaders’ time.

You have to build great teams, coach people, give them direct and honest feedback, nurture them and challenge them. And you have to hold them accountable.” Responsibilities that call for a high degree of ‘emotional intelligence’ from senior management.”

Lessons in Resilience from Bill McDermott, 19/11/2015

Business Case | Burning Platform

Current:

Random and redundant development experiences

Don't know what's required to develop

Not viewed as a priority for success

Expensive, externally sourced training
– not accessible

Some investment made, but don't see value/results at organizational level

Culture doesn't support application of learning

Readiness for next level progression not measured and supported

Future:

Competitive advantage

Retaining high performing talent

Drives organizational strategy

Strengthens culture change

Clearly defined learning and development journey

Supports readiness for next level progression
